To find out which industrial instrument applies to you, speak to human resources or your union representative.

PROTECTIONS AT WORK

All employees have protections at work. You can't be treated differently or worse (victimised) because you have or exercise a workplace right, for example, the right to request flexible working arrangements, take leave or make a complaint or enquiry about your employment.

You have the right to join a union or choose not to. However, some rights are only available to union members, such as the right to have a grievance dealt with by the Industrial Relations Commission of New South Wales, or the right to a public holiday on union picnic day.

You have the right to talk about (or not talk about) your current or past pay, and the terms and conditions of employment that would be needed to work out your pay (such as your hours of work). You can also ask other employees the same thing (about their pay and terms and conditions of employment) but they don't have to tell you.

You also have protections when temporarily absent from work due to illness or injury, and from discrimination, bullying and harassment, sexual harassment, coercion, misrepresentation, and undue influence or pressure.

PAY

The Local Government (State) Award 2023 ("Award") establishes minimum entry level rates of pay at the local government industry level.

The Award requires employers to have a 'salary system' with a structure that complements the entry level rates of pay and skill descriptors under the Award by identifying grades. Each grade is required to contain salary points/steps for progression that are over and above the entry level rates of pay. The employer's salary system establishes the minimum rates of pay at a council level.

You cannot agree to be paid less than the relevant salary system rate of pay for your position.
